

YOUR STORY MATTERS

STORY CONVERSATION

A great way to help others know that their story matters, is by having a conversation with them about their story. Some of the key elements of having an engaging conversation about a person's story are:

- Asking questions
- Listening
- Encouraging
- Relating and sharing parts of your story.

These questions will help you have a conversation with others about their story. Every student and every story matters.

Story Questions:

1. Tell us a little bit about yourself. For example: your name, how old you are, where you go to school, and some things you enjoy doing.
2. What is one word you would use to describe yourself? Why?
3. What would you say is the biggest struggle in your story? What are some words you would use to describe how those struggles felt?
4. Where have you found love and hope in those struggles?
5. Is there a person who has made a big impact in your life? In what way?
6. Has faith or spirituality been a part of your story? Share more if so.
7. Has religion affected you in positive or negative way?
8. If there was one thing you could tell people to let them know that their story matters and that there is hope, what would that one thing be?
